None of them could tell a connected story of the affair and they were covered with olough the affair and they were arrested on suspicion.

They are Henry Johnson, fireman; William Bradley, truckman, of 13 Feari street; James Crowley, truckman, of 15 Feari street; James Donovan, fireman, no home; Thomas Hammille, cook, living on the boat, and Charles O'Connor, a deck hand.

Capt. Eason, after investigating, believes that the man was silled accidentally. Johnson explains the presence of blood-stains on his diothing by saying that when he discovered Kerrigan he thought he was asleep and rolled him over on his side.

Capt. Eason thinks that Kerrigan started to go down to the fire-room and fell downstairs, breaking his neck.
